For centuries, the octopus was seen as little more than a strange creature of the deep. In recent decades, however, marine biologists have come to regard it as one of the most intelligent invertebrates on Earth. Octopuses can solve puzzles, open jars to reach food and even escape from tanks in laboratories. What makes this intelligence remarkable is that it evolved along a completely different path from our own. Unlike mammals, whose neurons are concentrated mainly in the brain, an octopus has about two-thirds of its neurons in its arms. Each arm can therefore react to its surroundings with a surprising degree of independence, tasting and touching objects without waiting for instructions from the central brain. Some researchers suggest that studying such a decentralised nervous system could help engineers design more flexible robots. Others warn, though, that our growing admiration for octopuses raises ethical questions about how they are caught and kept in captivity.

43. It is clear from the passage that octopuses ----.

A) were studied in laboratories for centuries

B) are now considered highly intelligent by marine biologists

C) have most of their neurons in their central brain

D) are closely related to mammals in evolutionary terms

E) cannot react to objects unless the brain sends instructions

44. According to the passage, what is unusual about the octopus's nervous system?

A) It is identical to that of other intelligent invertebrates.

B) It allows the octopus to survive only in captivity.

C) A large proportion of its neurons is located outside the brain.

D) Its neurons are smaller than those of mammals.

E) It developed in exactly the same way as the human brain.

45. The word "decentralised" in the passage is closest in meaning to ----.

A) damaged by an accident

B) simpler and less efficient than had been expected

C) developed only very recently in evolutionary history

D) fully dependent on the brain

E) spread out rather than controlled from one place

46. The author mentions ethical questions in the last sentence in order to ----.

A) prove that octopuses are more intelligent than mammals
B) explain in detail why engineers want to build more flexible robots
C) suggest that octopuses should no longer be studied in laboratories at all
D) show that octopuses can escape from tanks
E) point out that admiration for octopuses has implications for how humans treat them

47 – 50. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

The idea of a four-day working week, once dismissed as unrealistic, is now being tested by companies in several countries. In most trials, employees work around thirty-two hours a week for the same salary, on the condition that productivity does not fall. Early results have been encouraging. Many participating firms report that staff take fewer sick days, feel less stressed and are more focused during working hours. Some companies have even found that output increased, apparently because employees eliminated unnecessary meetings and distractions. Critics, however, point out that the model may not suit every sector. Hospitals, schools and factories that run around the clock cannot simply close for an extra day, and reorganising shifts can be costly. There is also concern that the benefits might fade once the novelty wears off. Supporters respond that these challenges are not reasons to abandon the idea but to adapt it carefully to each workplace.

47. According to the passage, in most four-day week trials ----.

A) employees work longer hours on each of the four days
B) salaries are reduced in proportion to the hours worked
C) employees are paid the same salary while working fewer hours
D) productivity is not measured at all
E) only hospitals and schools take part

48. Some companies saw an increase in output because ----.

A) they hired additional staff for the fifth day
B) workers cut out unnecessary meetings and distractions
C) employees were given financial bonuses
D) the trials lasted for several years
E) sick days were no longer allowed

49. Which of the following is NOT mentioned as a concern of the critics?

A) The model may not be suitable for all sectors.
B) Reorganising shifts can be expensive.
C) Some workplaces cannot close for an extra day.
D) Employees may demand higher salaries.
E) The benefits may disappear over time.

50. The supporters of the four-day week believe that ----.

A) every company should introduce it immediately
B) critics have greatly exaggerated the benefits that the model offers to workers
C) the novelty of the model will never wear off
D) the model should be adjusted to suit different workplaces rather than rejected
E) hospitals and schools are the best places to test the model before others

51 – 54. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

When people think of deserts, they usually imagine endless sand dunes. In reality, only about twenty per cent of the world's deserts are covered by sand; the rest consist of rocky plateaus, gravel plains and even ice. What all deserts share is not their landscape but their dryness: they receive less than 250 millimetres of rain a year. Despite these harsh conditions, deserts are far from lifeless. Many plants survive by storing water in thick stems or by sending roots deep into the ground. Some seeds can lie dormant for years, germinating only after a rare heavy rainfall. Animals, too, have developed clever strategies. Numerous desert species are active only at night, when temperatures are lower, while others obtain almost all the water they need from the food they eat. These adaptations make deserts valuable laboratories for scientists studying how life might cope with the hotter and drier conditions predicted for many regions in the future.

51. According to the passage, the feature common to all deserts is ----.

A) a landscape dominated by sand dunes
B) high temperatures throughout the year
C) a complete absence of plant life
D) the presence of rocky plateaus
E) a very low level of annual rainfall

52. It can be understood from the passage that some desert seeds ----.

A) germinate every night when temperatures fall
B) need sand in order to survive
C) can wait for a long time before they start to grow
D) are eaten by animals to obtain water
E) grow only in icy deserts

53. The passage mentions animals that are active at night as an example of ----.

A) a species that lives only in icy deserts
B) an animal that cannot find food
C) an adaptation to the harsh desert conditions
D) a scientific experiment carried out in a laboratory
E) the effects of climate change on deserts

54. According to the last sentence, scientists find deserts useful because ----.

A) they can show how living things may survive future climatic conditions
B) deserts will soon cover most of the planet
C) they can develop and grow new types of crops in them for hotter regions
D) deserts are the easiest and cheapest places in which to build new laboratories
E) desert animals do not need any water

55 – 58. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

Most of us assume that our memories are accurate recordings of past events, much like a video stored on a hard drive. Psychologists, however, have shown that memory is reconstructive rather than reproductive. Each time we recall an event, we rebuild it from fragments, filling in the gaps with assumptions, expectations and information we have acquired since. As a result, memories can change without our noticing. In a well-known type of experiment, participants watch a short film of a car accident and are later asked how fast the cars were going when they 'smashed into' or 'hit' each other. Those who hear the word 'smashed' typically give higher estimates and are more likely to report seeing broken glass, even though there was none. Such findings have serious implications for the legal system, where eyewitness testimony is often treated as highly reliable. They suggest that the way questions are worded can shape what a witness remembers.

55. The main idea of the passage is that ----.

A) memories are stored exactly like videos on a hard drive
B) memory is rebuilt each time it is recalled and is therefore open to change
C) car accidents are more difficult to remember than most other everyday events
D) eyewitnesses usually lie in court
E) psychologists have not yet found a reliable way to study memory scientifically

56. According to the passage, participants who heard the word 'smashed' ----.

A) gave lower estimates of the cars' speed
B) refused to answer the questions
C) remembered the accident more accurately
D) tended to remember things that did not actually happen
E) had not watched the film carefully

57. The word "reconstructive" in the passage refers to the fact that memories are ----.

A) destroyed as soon as an event is over
B) put together again from pieces each time we remember
C) copied perfectly from the original event
D) shared with other people
E) stored only for a short time

58. It can be inferred from the passage that in legal cases ----.

A) eyewitness testimony should always be accepted without question
B) films of accidents are more reliable than witnesses
C) witnesses should be asked to estimate speeds
D) judges never rely on what witnesses say
E) the wording of questions put to witnesses should be chosen carefully

59 – 62. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

Urban gardens, once a marginal hobby, are increasingly being promoted by city planners as a practical response to several modern problems. On a basic level, they allow residents to grow fresh vegetables in neighbourhoods where affordable healthy food is hard to find. Yet their benefits extend well beyond nutrition. Studies have found that gardening lowers stress levels and encourages physical activity among people of all ages. Community gardens, in particular, bring together neighbours who might otherwise never meet, strengthening social ties and, in some cases, reducing local crime. Environmental advantages are also significant: plants absorb rainwater that would otherwise overwhelm drainage systems and help to cool streets during heatwaves. Nevertheless, urban gardens face obstacles. Land in cities is expensive, and gardens are often the first to disappear when developers need space for housing. Soil in former industrial areas may also be contaminated, which means it must be tested before any food is grown.

59. The passage is mainly concerned with ----.

A) the long history of gardening as a popular hobby in large cities
B) how to grow vegetables in contaminated soil
C) the reasons why city land is so expensive
D) the main causes of crime in poor urban neighbourhoods and how to reduce it
E) the advantages of urban gardens and the difficulties they face

60. According to the passage, community gardens can ----.

A) replace drainage systems completely
B) provide all the food a city needs
C) help people in a neighbourhood get to know one another
D) make housing in the area cheaper for residents who rent
E) prevent heatwaves from occurring in the summer months

61. Which of the following is mentioned as an environmental benefit of urban gardens?

A) They reduce the price of land in cities.
B) They clean contaminated industrial soil.
C) They produce energy for nearby buildings.
D) They attract wild animals to city centres.
E) They help to lower street temperatures in very hot weather.

62. It is stated in the passage that soil in former industrial areas ----.

A) is the best soil for vegetables
B) is cheaper than land in other parts of the city
C) is usually protected from developers
D) should be checked before it is used to grow food
E) absorbs more rainwater than other soil

43 – 46. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

Cities are often several degrees warmer than the surrounding countryside, a phenomenon known as the urban heat island effect. The main cause is the replacement of vegetation with materials such as concrete and asphalt, which absorb sunlight during the day and release heat slowly at night. Waste heat from cars, air conditioners and factories adds to the problem. The consequences are more than a matter of comfort. During heatwaves, higher urban temperatures increase the risk of heatstroke, particularly among elderly people, and they raise the demand for electricity, which can lead to power cuts. Fortunately, there are relatively simple ways to reduce the effect. Painting roofs white reflects sunlight back into the atmosphere, while planting trees provides shade and cools the air through evaporation. Some cities have also created 'green roofs' covered with plants. Such measures cannot eliminate the heat island entirely, but studies suggest they can lower peak temperatures by a noticeable margin.

43. According to the passage, the main cause of the urban heat island effect is ----.

A) the large number of elderly people living in city centres
B) the use of white paint on the roofs of most buildings
C) the lack of electricity during summer heatwaves
D) the replacement of plants with heat-absorbing building materials
E) the evaporation of water from trees and green roofs

44. It is stated in the passage that during heatwaves higher urban temperatures ----.

A) make it impossible for cities to produce enough electricity
B) can cause health risks and increase the demand for electricity
C) affect people living in the countryside more than city residents

E) have no effect on elderly people living in cities

45. The author mentions painting roofs white as an example of ----.

B) an expensive solution that few cities can afford
C) a fairly simple measure that can reduce urban temperatures
D) a way of increasing the demand for electricity
E) a cause of the urban heat island effect

46. It can be concluded from the last sentence that the measures described ----.

A) have failed in every city in which they were tried
B) are helpful even though they cannot solve the problem completely
C) are more effective in the countryside than in cities
D) will make cities cooler than the countryside
E) have not yet been studied by scientists

47 – 50. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

Traditional economics assumes that people make rational decisions, carefully weighing costs and benefits before they act. Behavioural economists have challenged this view by showing that our choices are frequently influenced by habits, emotions and the way options are presented. One of the most influential ideas to emerge from this field is the 'nudge': a small change in the environment that steers people towards better decisions without restricting their freedom. For instance, when employees are automatically enrolled in a pension scheme and must actively choose to leave it, participation rates rise dramatically compared with schemes that require people to sign up. Similarly, placing fruit at eye level in school canteens encourages children to choose healthier snacks. Supporters argue that nudges are cheap and effective. Critics, however, worry that governments and companies could use the same techniques to manipulate people in ways that serve their own interests rather than the public good.

47. According to the passage, behavioural economists have shown that ----.

A) people always weigh costs and benefits carefully before acting
B) traditional economics is more reliable than behavioural economics
C) people's decisions are often shaped by factors other than rational calculation
D) emotions have no influence on financial decisions
E) nudges reduce people's freedom to make choices

48. The example of the pension scheme illustrates that ----.

A) most employees prefer to choose their own pension scheme without any help
B) making participation the default option greatly increases the number of people who join
C) pension schemes are more popular in companies with healthy canteens
D) people who leave pension schemes are usually making irrational decisions
E) employees are not allowed to leave pension schemes once they have joined

49. The word "steers" in the passage is closest in meaning to ----.

A) forces
B) prevents
C) punishes

More than eighty per cent of the ocean remains unmapped in detail, which means we know more about the surface of Mars than about the floor of our own seas. Exploring the deep ocean is extraordinarily difficult. Below about two hundred metres, sunlight disappears completely, temperatures approach freezing and the pressure becomes crushing, increasing by roughly one atmosphere for every ten metres of depth. For decades, only a handful of crewed submarines could withstand such conditions. Today, however, remotely operated vehicles and autonomous robots equipped with cameras and sensors are transforming the field. They can remain underwater for weeks, collecting samples and images from places no human could reach. These missions regularly discover species unknown to science, from glowing jellyfish to worms that live near volcanic vents and feed on chemicals rather than sunlight. Yet as exploration advances, so does commercial interest in mining the seabed for metals used in batteries, raising fears that ecosystems may be destroyed before they are even understood.

51. The author compares the ocean floor with the surface of Mars in order to ----.

A) show that Mars is easier to reach than the bottom of the sea
B) argue that space exploration should receive less funding
C) prove that both environments contain similar forms of life
D) explain why the pressure in the deep ocean is so high
E) emphasise how little of the deep ocean has been studied in detail

52. According to the passage, which of the following is NOT one of the difficulties of deep-sea exploration?

A) The complete absence of sunlight
B) Strong currents that carry vehicles away
C) Temperatures close to freezing
D) Extremely high pressure
E) The limited number of submarines that can survive

53. It is stated in the passage that some worms living near volcanic vents ----.

A) produce light in order to attract their prey
B) obtain their energy from chemicals instead of sunlight
C) were discovered by crewed submarines decades ago
D) are used by mining companies to find metals
E) can survive only in shallow water

54. The last sentence of the passage suggests that ----.

A) deep-sea exploration has become less important than mining
B) batteries can be produced without using any metals
C) most new species are discovered by mining companies
D) scientists fully understand deep-sea ecosystems already
E) seabed mining could harm ecosystems that scientists have not yet studied

The printing press, developed in Europe in the mid-fifteenth century, is usually celebrated for making books cheaper and spreading literacy. Less often discussed is its effect on language itself. Before printing, spelling varied widely, even within a single manuscript, because scribes wrote words as they heard them in their own regional accents. Printers, who wanted their books to be read across large areas, gradually adopted consistent spellings and favoured the dialect of major commercial centres. Over time, these choices helped to establish standard national languages. The process was not always logical, however. Some early printers, paid by the line, added extra letters to words, and others were foreign workers unfamiliar with local conventions. Several of the irregular spellings that frustrate learners of English today can be traced back to such decisions. In this sense, the printing press did not simply record language; it actively shaped the form in which later generations would learn to write it.

55. According to the passage, before printing, spelling varied because ----.

A) most books were translated from foreign languages
B) printers were paid according to the number of lines
C) there were very few people who could read
D) national languages had already become standardised
E) scribes wrote words according to the way they pronounced them locally

56. Printers adopted consistent spellings mainly because ----.

A) the government forced them to use a standard language
B) they wanted their books to be understood by readers in a wide area
C) they were unfamiliar with regional accents
D) manuscripts had always used the same spelling
E) spelling mistakes made books more expensive

57. The author refers to printers who were paid by the line in order to show that ----.

A) some features of modern spelling arose from practical rather than logical reasons
B) early printed books were much shorter than manuscripts
C) foreign workers produced better books than local printers
D) printing made books more expensive than before
E) the dialect of commercial centres was difficult to spell

58. The main point of the passage is that the printing press ----.

A) was mainly responsible for the decline of regional dialects in speech
B) made it impossible for scribes to find work
C) had little effect on the spread of literacy in Europe
D) introduced spelling rules that were completely logical
E) played an important role in shaping the written form of languages

Loneliness was once considered a private emotional problem, but public health researchers increasingly treat it as a serious risk to physical health. Large studies have linked chronic loneliness to higher rates of heart disease, weakened immune function and even earlier death, with some estimates suggesting that its effects are comparable to those of smoking. Importantly, loneliness is not the same as being alone. Many people live by themselves and feel perfectly content, while others feel isolated despite being surrounded by family and colleagues. What matters, researchers argue, is the gap between the social relationships people have and those they want. This distinction has practical consequences. Programmes that simply increase the amount of contact, such as group activities, do not always help. More promising are approaches that address the way lonely people think about relationships, since chronic loneliness can make individuals more alert to rejection and therefore less likely to reach out to others.

59. According to the passage, researchers now view loneliness as ----.

A) a purely emotional problem with no physical consequences
B) a direct result of living alone in a large city
C) less harmful to health than people used to think
D) a condition that can have serious effects on physical health
E) a problem that affects only elderly people

60. The author states that loneliness is not the same as being alone in order to ----.

A) show that people who live alone are always lonely and unhappy
B) argue that families and colleagues are the main cause of loneliness
C) suggest that being alone is more dangerous than smoking
D) explain why group activities are the best solution
E) stress that feeling lonely depends on unmet social needs rather than on physical isolation

61. It can be understood from the passage that programmes which only increase social contact ----.

A) are the most successful way of treating loneliness
B) make lonely people more alert to rejection
C) have been replaced by medical treatments
D) are not always effective in reducing loneliness
E) are designed mainly for people who smoke

62. According to the passage, chronic loneliness can make people ----.

A) more sensitive to rejection and less willing to approach others
B) more interested in group activities than before
C) physically stronger but emotionally weaker
D) less likely to suffer from heart disease
E) more successful in their relationships with colleagues

72. In many parts of the world, traditional farming methods are being replaced by large-scale monocultures, in which a single crop is grown over vast areas. ---- When the same plant is grown year after year, pests and diseases that attack it can spread rapidly, and farmers must use increasing amounts of chemicals to control them. The fashion industry has changed dramatically over the past three decades. Clothing brands that once released two collections a year now introduce new designs every few weeks, a business model known as 'fast fashion'. By producing large quantities of cheap garments in countries with low labour costs, these companies have made trendy clothes affordable to millions of consumers. The environmental cost, however, is considerable. The industry is estimated to be responsible for a significant share of global carbon emissions and uses enormous amounts of water; producing a single cotton shirt can require more than two thousand litres. Because the clothes are inexpensive, they are often worn only a few times before being thrown away, and most end up in landfill rather than being recycled. Working conditions in some factories have also attracted criticism. In response, a growing number of consumers are turning to second-hand shops, clothing rental services and brands that promise to use sustainable materials, although critics note that such options still represent only a small part of the market.

43. According to the passage, fast fashion companies have made trendy clothes affordable by ----.

A) show that cotton is the most popular material in fashion

B) argue that cotton shirts should no longer be produced

C) explain why clothes are thrown away so quickly

D) illustrate how much water the clothing industry consumes

E) compare the prices of different types of clothing

45. It is stated in the passage that most cheap clothes ----.

A) are recycled into new garments by the same companies

B) are sold in second-hand shops after one season

C) are rented rather than bought by young consumers

46. According to the critics mentioned in the last sentence, sustainable alternatives ----.

A) have completely replaced fast fashion in many countries
B) are more harmful to the environment than fast fashion
C) still account for only a small proportion of the clothing market

Writing was invented independently in several parts of the world, but the earliest known system developed in Mesopotamia more than five thousand years ago. Interestingly, it did not emerge from a desire to record stories or religious texts. Instead, it grew out of the practical needs of accounting. As cities expanded and trade increased, officials needed a reliable way to keep track of goods such as grain, livestock and textiles. At first, they used small clay tokens of different shapes to represent quantities. Over time, these tokens were replaced by marks pressed into clay tablets with a reed, producing the wedge-shaped signs we now call cuneiform. Gradually, the signs came to represent not only objects but also sounds, which allowed scribes to write names, laws and eventually literature, including the famous Epic of Gilgamesh. Because clay tablets survive well when baked, hundreds of thousands of them have been recovered, giving historians an unusually detailed picture of daily life in ancient Mesopotamia.

47. According to the passage, writing in Mesopotamia first developed ----.

A) in order to preserve religious texts and stories
B) only after scribes had begun to write down literature
C) to meet the administrative needs of recording goods and trade
D) as a way of teaching children in cities how to read
E) because officials wanted to write new laws

48. It can be understood from the passage that clay tokens ----.

A) were baked in ovens so that they would last much longer
B) were used mainly to record the names of kings and gods
C) replaced the marks pressed into clay tablets
D) represented sounds rather than objects
E) were used to represent quantities before cuneiform signs appeared

49. The development that allowed scribes to write names and literature was that ----.

A) the signs began to stand for sounds as well as objects
B) clay tablets became much cheaper and easier to produce
C) more officials learned how to press signs with reeds
D) trade between cities became less important
E) the tokens were made in different shapes

50. According to the passage, historians know a great deal about daily life in Mesopotamia because ----.

A) a very large number of durable clay tablets have survived
B) the Epic of Gilgamesh describes daily life in detail
C) Mesopotamian officials wrote history books
D) writing was invented there before anywhere else
E) cuneiform signs are easy for modern scholars to read

Almost everyone procrastinates from time to time, delaying tasks they know they should complete. It is tempting to see this behaviour as a simple problem of laziness or poor time management, but psychologists increasingly describe it as a problem of emotional regulation. According to this view, people put off tasks not because they are unwilling to work but because the tasks themselves trigger unpleasant feelings such as boredom, anxiety or self-doubt. Avoiding the task brings immediate relief, which reinforces the habit, even though the relief is followed by greater stress as deadlines approach. This explains why giving procrastinators better calendars or to-do lists often has limited effect. More successful strategies focus on the feelings involved. Breaking a large task into very small steps can make it less threatening, while treating oneself with kindness after a failure, rather than with harsh criticism, has been shown to reduce future procrastination. Paradoxically, people who forgive themselves for delaying are less likely to delay again.

51. According to the passage, psychologists increasingly see procrastination as ----.

A) a sign that a person is fundamentally lazy
B) the result of having too many tasks to complete
C) a problem that only affects people with anxiety
D) a habit that disappears as deadlines approach
E) a way of avoiding negative emotions linked to a task

52. It is stated in the passage that avoiding a task ----.

A) gives short-term relief that makes the habit stronger
B) always reduces stress in the long term
C) helps people manage their time more effectively
D) is less common among people who use to-do lists
E) makes the task itself more interesting

53. The author mentions calendars and to-do lists in order to show that ----.

A) tools for organising time do not address the real cause of procrastination
B) most people who procrastinate do not own a calendar
C) planning tools are the most effective solution available
D) procrastination was unknown before such tools existed
E) psychologists have designed better time-management tools

54. The 'paradox' described in the last sentence is that ----.

A) people who criticise themselves harshly never procrastinate
B) small steps make large tasks more threatening
C) forgiving others is harder than forgiving oneself
D) procrastinators work better when deadlines are close
E) being kind to oneself after delaying makes further delay less likely

55 – 58. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

For most of human history, the night sky was filled with thousands of visible stars. Today, however, more than a third of the world's population can no longer see the Milky Way, largely because of artificial light. Light pollution is often regarded as a concern only for astronomers, but its effects reach much further. Many animals rely on natural patterns of light and darkness. Newly hatched sea turtles, for instance, find the ocean by moving towards the brighter horizon over the water; bright coastal lights can lead them inland, where they die. Migrating birds may become disoriented by illuminated buildings and collide with them in large numbers. Humans are affected too. Exposure to bright light at night suppresses the production of melatonin, a hormone that regulates sleep, and some studies have linked night-time light to health problems. Unlike many forms of pollution, light pollution is relatively easy to reduce: shielding street lamps so that they point downwards, using warmer colours and switching off unnecessary lights can make a noticeable difference almost immediately.

55. The passage mainly discusses ----.

A) the history of astronomy and the discovery of the Milky Way
B) the wide-ranging effects of artificial light and ways of reducing it
C) why sea turtles are becoming extinct in many regions
D) the role of melatonin in regulating human sleep
E) the reasons why cities need more street lamps

56. According to the passage, bright coastal lights are dangerous to young sea turtles because ----.

A) they make the turtles easier for birds to catch
B) they increase the temperature of the sand
C) they prevent the eggs from hatching
D) they cause the turtles to move away from the sea
E) they reduce the turtles' production of melatonin

57. It is stated in the passage that light at night ----.

A) helps migrating birds find their way more easily
B) has no proven effects on human health or behaviour
C) reduces the body's production of a hormone that controls sleep
D) is a serious problem only in the very largest cities
E) makes the Milky Way easier to see

58. According to the last sentence, light pollution differs from many other forms of pollution in that ----.

A) it can be reduced fairly easily and with quick results
B) it affects only wild animals and not people in cities
C) it is much more expensive to deal with
D) it has been studied for a much longer period of time
E) it cannot be measured accurately by most scientists

Bilingual education programmes, in which children are taught partly in their home language and partly in the national language, have long been controversial. Opponents argue that they slow down the learning of the national language and may prevent children from integrating into wider society. However, a large body of research suggests the opposite. Children who first develop strong reading skills in their home language often transfer these skills to a second language more easily than children who are taught only in an unfamiliar language from the start. Learning to read is, after all, much simpler when one understands the words being read. Bilingual programmes have also been associated with higher school attendance and greater parental involvement, since parents who do not speak the national language well can still help with homework. That said, the success of such programmes depends heavily on the availability of qualified teachers and suitable textbooks, which are often in short supply for minority languages.

59. According to the opponents of bilingual education, such programmes ----.

A) may delay children's learning of the national language
B) improve children's reading skills in both languages
C) are too expensive for most schools to run
D) encourage parents to become involved in schooling
E) require too many qualified teachers

60. The author points out that 'learning to read is much simpler when one understands the words being read' in order to ----.

A) argue that children should learn only one language at school
B) show that most children cannot read before they start school
C) explain why reading skills developed in the home language transfer well
D) criticise teachers who use unfamiliar languages
E) suggest that textbooks should be written in simpler language

61. According to the passage, bilingual programmes can increase parental involvement because ----.

A) parents who are weak in the national language can still help their children
B) parents are required to attend lessons with their children
C) schools offer free language courses to parents
D) homework is given only in the national language
E) teachers visit families at home every week

62. It can be inferred from the last sentence that bilingual education ----.

A) may fail where there are not enough trained teachers or materials
B) is successful in every country where it has been tried
C) is unnecessary for speakers of minority languages
D) should be replaced by teaching in the national language
E) is supported by all governments and teachers

The placebo effect occurs when a patient's condition improves after receiving a treatment that has no active ingredient, such as a sugar pill. For many years, doctors regarded it as a nuisance (17) ---- complicated the testing of new drugs. Today, however, researchers see it as a fascinating example of the connection between mind and body. Studies have shown that placebos can reduce pain, ease symptoms of anxiety and even improve sleep. Interestingly, the effect depends (18) ---- expectations: expensive-looking pills tend to work better than cheap ones, and injections often produce stronger effects than tablets. Even more surprisingly, some patients improve (19) ---- they are told that the pills they are taking contain no medicine. Scientists believe that the ritual of treatment itself, including the attention of a caring doctor, may trigger the body's natural pain-relieving mechanisms. (20) ----, placebos cannot cure diseases such as cancer or infections, and relying on them (21) ---- proper treatment could be dangerous.

Vertical farming, the practice of growing crops in stacked layers inside buildings, has been promoted as a solution to some of agriculture's biggest challenges. Because plants are grown indoors under controlled conditions, they are protected from droughts, floods and pests, and they can be harvested all year round. Most vertical farms use hydroponic systems, in which plants grow in nutrient-rich water instead of soil, using up to ninety per cent less water than conventional farming. Locating these farms in cities also reduces the distance that food must travel to reach consumers. Despite these advantages, vertical farming faces a major obstacle: energy. Since the plants receive no sunlight, they depend entirely on artificial lighting, which makes electricity one of the largest operating costs. Several well-funded companies have gone bankrupt in recent years for this reason. As a result, vertical farms currently focus on high-value crops such as herbs and salad leaves, while staple foods like wheat and rice remain far too expensive to grow in this way.

43. According to the passage, one advantage of vertical farming is that ----.

A) it requires much less electricity than traditional farming

B) plants grow faster in soil than in water

C) it is the cheapest way to produce wheat and rice

D) crops can be grown regardless of the season or weather

E) crops are exposed to more natural sunlight

44. It is stated in the passage that hydroponic systems ----.

A) require plants to be grown in very rich soil

B) are used mainly for growing staple foods

C) depend entirely on natural sunlight

D) have been banned in several large cities

E) use considerably less water than conventional methods

45. According to the passage, several vertical farming companies have gone bankrupt because ----.

A) the cost of the electricity needed for lighting is very high

B) consumers prefer food grown in traditional farms

C) their crops were destroyed by pests and floods

D) they were located too far away from cities

E) they focused on growing wheat and rice

46. It can be inferred from the passage that vertical farming ----.

A) will soon replace traditional agriculture completely
B) is more suitable for rice than for salad leaves
C) uses more water than any other farming method
D) is supported mainly by farmers in rural areas
E) is not yet a practical way of producing the world's main food crops

In the late eighteenth century, smallpox killed hundreds of thousands of people in Europe every year and left many survivors blind or badly scarred. People had long noticed that those who recovered from the disease never caught it again, and in parts of Asia and Africa a practice called variolation was used: material from a smallpox sore was deliberately introduced into a small cut on a healthy person's skin. This usually caused a mild infection that provided immunity, but it was risky, as some patients developed severe smallpox and could infect others. The English doctor Edward Jenner developed a safer method after observing that milkmaids who had caught cowpox, a mild disease of cattle, seemed to be protected from smallpox. In 1796, he tested his idea by infecting a boy with cowpox and later exposing him to smallpox; the boy did not become ill. Jenner's method, which he called vaccination after the Latin word for cow, spread rapidly. Nearly two centuries later, in 1980, smallpox became the first human disease to be declared eradicated.

47. According to the passage, variolation was risky because ----.

A) it was practised only in parts of Asia and Africa
B) it required material taken from infected cattle
C) some people developed a serious form of smallpox and could spread it
D) it did not provide any immunity to smallpox
E) it left patients blind or badly scarred in every case

48. Jenner's idea was based on the observation that ----.

A) people who recovered from smallpox always caught it again
B) cattle were often infected with smallpox by milkmaids
C) milkmaids who had had cowpox appeared to be immune to smallpox
D) children were less likely than adults to catch smallpox
E) variolation was more effective in Africa than in Europe

49. The word "vaccination" comes from ----.

A) the name of the boy Jenner treated
B) the Asian practice of variolation
C) the English word for disease
D) the Latin word for cow
E) the name of a milkmaid

50. Which of the following can be concluded from the passage?

A) Jenner's method eventually contributed to the complete elimination of a deadly disease.
B) Variolation was considered safer than vaccination and therefore remained in use for longer.
C) Smallpox mainly affected cattle rather than humans in Europe.
D) Jenner's experiment on the boy was unsuccessful at first.
E) Smallpox is still a common cause of death in several poorer parts of the world today.

Humpback whales are famous for their songs, complex sequences of moans, cries and clicks that can last for up to half an hour and be repeated for hours. Only males sing, and they do so mainly during the breeding season, which has led many researchers to conclude that the songs play a role in attracting females or competing with rival males. What makes the songs truly remarkable, however, is the way they change. Within a population, all males sing roughly the same song, but this song gradually evolves over the course of a season as new phrases are added and old ones are dropped. Occasionally, an entirely new song spreads rapidly from one population to another across thousands of kilometres of ocean, replacing the old one within a year or two. Some scientists compare this process to the spread of popular music among humans. It suggests that whales are capable of cultural transmission, learning behaviour from one another rather than inheriting it genetically.

51. According to the passage, many researchers believe that humpback whale songs ----.

A) are connected with mating and competition between males
B) are used mainly to find food in deep water
C) are sung by females to communicate with their young
D) never change from one year to the next
E) are inherited genetically from parent whales

52. It is stated in the passage that within a population of humpback whales ----.

A) each male sings a completely different song
B) the songs are sung only by the oldest males
C) the same song is repeated unchanged for many years
D) females decide which song the males will sing
E) the males sing similar songs that change gradually over time

53. The author compares the spread of whale songs to the spread of popular music in order to ----.

A) show that whales are able to hear human music
B) argue that whale songs are more complex than human music
C) explain why only males sing during the breeding season
D) suggest that whale songs are inherited from parents
E) highlight how quickly new songs can be adopted by distant groups

54. It can be understood from the last sentence that the way whale songs spread suggests that ----.

A) whales can learn behaviour from other whales
B) whale songs are controlled entirely by genes
C) whales copy the sounds made by ships
D) only young whales are able to learn new songs
E) whales living far apart never communicate

The so-called gig economy, in which people work as independent contractors on short-term tasks found through digital platforms, has grown rapidly over the past decade. Drivers, delivery riders, translators and designers can now find work through apps that connect them directly with customers. Supporters argue that this model offers flexibility: workers can choose when and how much they work, which suits students, parents and people looking for extra income. Companies, meanwhile, benefit from being able to expand or reduce their workforce quickly. Critics, however, point out that this flexibility often comes at a price. Because gig workers are not classified as employees, they usually have no right to sick pay, holiday pay or pensions, and their income can vary greatly from week to week. Algorithms that assign tasks and rate performance can also deactivate workers with little explanation. In response, courts in several countries have ruled that some platform workers should be treated as employees, a decision that companies warn could raise prices for consumers.

55. According to the supporters of the gig economy, its main advantage for workers is that ----.

A) they receive higher wages than ordinary employees
B) they are entitled to sick pay and pensions
C) their income remains stable from week to week
D) they are protected by algorithms from losing work
E) they can decide for themselves when and how much to work

56. The phrase "this flexibility often comes at a price" suggests that ----.

A) gig workers have to pay a monthly fee in order to use digital platforms
B) flexible work is more expensive for customers
C) companies must pay considerably more to hire flexible workers
D) the freedom offered by gig work has certain disadvantages for workers
E) workers prefer fixed hours to flexible ones

57. Which of the following is NOT mentioned as a problem faced by gig workers?

A) They usually do not receive holiday pay.
B) They are often required to work longer hours than employees.
C) Their weekly income can be unpredictable.
D) They may be removed from platforms without a clear reason.
E) They often have no pension rights.

58. According to the passage, companies fear that court decisions treating platform workers as employees ----.

A) will reduce the number of digital platforms
B) may lead to higher prices for consumers
C) will make algorithms more transparent
D) could encourage more students to become drivers
E) will have no effect on how platforms operate

59 – 62. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

Most people find it difficult to believe that an object's colour depends partly on the brain. Yet colour is not a property of objects in the way that weight or size is. A ripe tomato does not contain 'redness'; rather, its surface absorbs most wavelengths of light and reflects mainly those that our eyes and brain interpret as red. The process of interpretation is so complex that the same object can look different under different conditions, and the brain constantly adjusts our perception to compensate. This is why a white sheet of paper appears white both in the yellowish light of a lamp and in the bluish light of a cloudy day, even though the light reaching our eyes is quite different. Occasionally, the brain's adjustments lead people to disagree strongly about a colour, as happened in 2015, when a photograph of a dress caused worldwide debate about whether it was blue and black or white and gold. Scientists explained that viewers' brains were making different assumptions about the lighting in the image.

59. The main idea of the passage is that ----.

A) the colours we see are partly constructed by the brain
B) objects contain the colours that we see in them
C) most people cannot see colours accurately
D) colour is a fixed property like weight or size
E) artificial light changes the colour of objects

60. According to the passage, a ripe tomato looks red because ----.

A) it contains a substance called redness
B) it absorbs all the light that reaches it
C) it reflects mainly the wavelengths that we perceive as red
D) our eyes can see only the colour red clearly
E) the brain cannot adjust to different lighting

61. The example of the white sheet of paper shows that ----.

A) white paper reflects more light than any other object
B) lamps produce light that is too yellow to read by
C) colours look the same to everyone in all conditions
D) cloudy days make colours more difficult to see
E) the brain adjusts our perception of colour to different kinds of light

62. According to the scientists mentioned in the passage, people disagreed about the colour of the dress because ----.

A) the photograph had been changed by computer software
B) their brains made different assumptions about the lighting
C) some viewers were unable to see the colour blue
D) the dress changed colour depending on the time of day
E) most of them were looking at it on different screens

73. For centuries, sailors could determine their latitude, their position north or south, by measuring the angle of the sun or the stars. Longitude, their position east or west, was a much harder problem. ---- In the eighteenth century, the English clockmaker John Harrison built a series of clocks that kept accurate time even on rolling ships, finally allowing navigators to calculate their longitude reliably.

A) Calculating it required knowing the exact time at a fixed reference point, and ordinary clocks were too inaccurate at sea.

B) Many sailors at that time came from poor families and had never learned how to read or write properly.

C) In the same period, merchant ships were frequently attacked by pirates, especially in the Caribbean Sea.

D) The sun rises in the east and sets in the west every day.

E) Some of the most accurate and beautiful maps of the period were produced by craftsmen in the Netherlands.

74. Many people believe that cracking their knuckles will eventually cause arthritis. ---- One doctor famously cracked the knuckles of only one hand for more than sixty years and found no difference in arthritis between his two hands. Larger studies have reached similar conclusions, although habitual knuckle cracking may be linked to slight swelling.

A) Arthritis affects millions of people around the world.

B) The cracking sound is caused by bubbles of gas in the joint fluid.

C) However, there is little scientific evidence to support this belief.

D) Doctors usually recommend regular exercise for healthy joints.

E) Children often pick up this habit from their parents.

75. The Vikings are often remembered as violent raiders who attacked monasteries and towns across Europe. ---- They established trade routes stretching from the North Atlantic to the Middle East, founded cities such as Dublin and were among the first Europeans to reach North America, around five hundred years before Columbus.

A) Their ships were designed to sail in both deep and shallow water.

B) Many Viking legends were written down centuries later in Iceland.

C) Monasteries were often the richest buildings in medieval Europe.

D) Today, Scandinavia is known for its high standard of living.

E) Yet they were also skilled traders, explorers and settlers.

Few foods have had as great an impact on European history as the potato. Native to the Andes of South America, it was brought to Europe by Spanish explorers in the sixteenth century. At first, however, it was met with suspicion. Some people believed that it caused disease, (22) ---- others simply considered it food fit only for animals. It was not until the eighteenth century that the potato became widely accepted, partly (23) ---- governments actively encouraged farmers to grow it. The potato had important advantages: it produced more calories per hectare than grain and could be grown in poor soil. (24) ----, it helped to support rapid population growth in many parts of northern Europe. Dependence on a single crop, however, proved dangerous. In the 1840s, a plant disease destroyed potato harvests across Ireland, (25) ---- the population relied heavily on potatoes for food. Many populations around the world are ageing rapidly. In Japan, more than a quarter of the population is already over sixty-five, and several European countries are not far behind. This shift is the result of two positive trends: people are living longer thanks to better healthcare, and couples are having fewer children. Nevertheless, it presents serious economic challenges. As the proportion of older people rises, there are fewer workers paying taxes to support pensions and healthcare for retirees. Governments have responded in various ways. Some have raised the retirement age, arguing that people who live longer can also work longer. Others are encouraging immigration to fill gaps in the workforce, or investing in robots and automation, particularly in care for the elderly. Some economists, however, argue that the challenges are often exaggerated. Older people today are generally healthier than previous generations, and many continue to contribute to society through part-time work, volunteering and caring for grandchildren.

43. According to the passage, the ageing of populations is caused by ----.

A) a sudden increase in the number of older immigrants

B) longer life expectancy combined with lower birth rates

C) governments raising the retirement age in many countries

D) the poor quality of healthcare in many countries

E) the growing use of robots in the care of the elderly

44. It is stated in the passage that an ageing population creates economic difficulties because ----.

A) fewer working people pay the taxes that support older people

B) older people refuse to pay taxes after they retire

C) most older people continue to work full-time

D) immigration has reduced the number of jobs available

E) robots have replaced most workers in many sectors

45. Which of the following is NOT mentioned as a government response to ageing populations?

A) Offering financial rewards to families with more children

B) Raising the age at which people retire

C) Encouraging people from other countries to come and work

D) Investing in automation and robots

E) Using technology in care for older people

46. The economists mentioned at the end of the passage believe that ----.

A) older people should be required to work full-time
B) governments have not done enough to solve the problem
C) the problems of ageing populations are sometimes overstated
D) volunteering is more important than paid work
E) previous generations were healthier than today's

Bioluminescence, the ability of living organisms to produce light, is surprisingly common in nature. It is found in fireflies, certain fungi and, above all, in the ocean, where an estimated three-quarters of animals living in the open sea can produce some form of light. The light results from a chemical reaction in which a substance called luciferin reacts with oxygen, usually with the help of an enzyme. Unlike a light bulb, the process releases almost no heat, which is why it is sometimes described as 'cold light'. Marine animals use bioluminescence for a wide range of purposes. Some deep-sea fish have glowing lures that attract prey towards their jaws, while certain shrimp release clouds of luminous fluid to confuse predators. Other animals use light for camouflage: by glowing faintly on their undersides, they match the dim light coming from above and become almost invisible to predators looking up from below. Scientists have also learned to use the genes responsible for bioluminescence as tools in medical research.

47. According to the passage, bioluminescence is ----.

A) especially widespread among animals living in the open sea
B) found only in insects such as fireflies
C) a process that produces a great deal of heat
D) rare in nature and difficult to study
E) used by animals only to attract partners

48. Bioluminescence is described as 'cold light' because ----.

A) it is found mainly in the cold waters of the deep ocean
B) it is produced only at night when temperatures are low
C) the chemical reaction that produces it gives off very little heat
D) it is blue rather than red or yellow
E) it was first discovered in polar regions

49. Animals that glow faintly on their undersides do so in order to ----.

A) attract prey towards their mouths
B) communicate with other members of their species
C) blend in with the light from above and hide from predators
D) confuse predators with clouds of glowing fluid
E) keep themselves warm in deep water

50. It can be understood from the last sentence that bioluminescence ----.

A) is harmful to humans who study it
B) can be used to cure most diseases
C) is no longer of interest to scientists
D) exists only in marine animals
E) has practical applications outside the natural world

Open-source software is software whose source code is made freely available, allowing anyone to study, modify and share it. At first glance, the model seems economically puzzling. Why would thousands of skilled programmers contribute their time to projects for which they receive no direct payment? Research suggests several motivations. Some developers contribute because they need the software themselves and benefit from improvements made by others. Others are motivated by the enjoyment of solving problems or by the desire to build a reputation that can lead to better job offers. In addition, many large technology companies now pay employees to work on open-source projects, because they rely on this software and want to influence its development. The results have been remarkable: open-source programs power much of the internet, including most web servers and the operating systems of many smartphones. Nevertheless, the model has weaknesses. Some widely used projects are maintained by only a handful of unpaid volunteers, and when security flaws are discovered, there may be nobody available to fix them quickly.

51. According to the passage, open-source software ----.

A) is always written by programmers who receive no payment
B) can be freely studied, changed and distributed by anyone
C) is used only by small technology companies
D) has had little influence on the development of the internet
E) is protected from all security problems

52. The author describes the model as "economically puzzling" because ----.

A) open-source software is more expensive than other software
B) large companies refuse to use open-source programs
C) many skilled people contribute to it without being paid directly
D) it is difficult to calculate how much the software is worth
E) programmers are paid more for open-source work

53. Which of the following is NOT given as a reason why people contribute to open-source projects?

A) They need the software for their own use.
B) They are required to do so by law.
C) They enjoy solving technical problems.
D) They hope to improve their career prospects.
E) Their employers pay them to do it.

54. According to the passage, one weakness of the open-source model is that ----.

A) important projects may depend on very few volunteers
B) most open-source programs do not work on smartphones
C) companies are not allowed to influence its development
D) the source code is kept secret from most users
E) volunteers usually charge high fees for their work

55 – 58. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

The ability to delay gratification, to resist an immediate reward in favour of a larger one later, has long been linked to success in life. In a series of famous experiments begun in the 1960s, young children were offered a choice: they could eat one marshmallow immediately, or wait alone for several minutes and receive two. Follow-up studies years later reported that the children who had waited longer tended to achieve better academic results. These findings were widely interpreted as evidence that self-control is a stable personality trait that predicts future success. More recent research, however, has complicated this picture. When the experiment was repeated with a larger and more diverse group of children, the link with later achievement was much weaker, and it largely disappeared once factors such as family income were taken into account. Other studies found that children were more willing to wait when the adult running the experiment had previously kept a promise. This suggests that waiting may reflect a rational judgement about whether the environment is reliable rather than self-control alone.

55. According to the passage, the original follow-up studies suggested that ----.

A) children who waited longer later tended to do better at school
B) most children chose to eat the marshmallow immediately
C) self-control can easily be taught to young children
D) family income has no effect on academic results
E) children perform better when adults are present

56. The phrase "complicated this picture" means that more recent research ----.

A) confirmed that self-control predicts success
B) proved that the original experiments were never carried out
C) showed that marshmallows are harmful to children
D) made the original conclusions seem less simple and certain
E) made the experiments easier to repeat

57. It is stated in the passage that when the experiment was repeated with a larger group, ----.

A) the children waited much longer than in the 1960s
B) family income turned out to be unimportant
C) the results were exactly the same as before

59 – 62. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

In 1799, French soldiers rebuilding a fort near the Egyptian town of Rosetta discovered a broken slab of dark stone covered in writing. The stone carried the same text in three scripts: ancient Greek, a cursive Egyptian script known as Demotic, and hieroglyphs. Because scholars could still read ancient Greek, they realised that the stone might provide the key to understanding hieroglyphs, which nobody had been able to read for more than a thousand years. The task nevertheless proved extremely difficult. Many scholars assumed that hieroglyphs were purely symbolic, each sign representing an idea rather than a sound. The breakthrough came in the 1820s, when the French scholar Jean-François Champollion showed that hieroglyphs combined both: some signs represented sounds, while others represented whole words or ideas. Champollion's knowledge of Coptic, a later form of the Egyptian language, was crucial to his success. His work opened up thousands of years of Egyptian history, allowing scholars to read inscriptions on temples, tombs and papyri for the first time.

59. According to the passage, the Rosetta Stone was important because ----.

A) it contained the same text in a script that scholars could already read
B) it was the only surviving example of Demotic writing

E) they wrongly believed that the signs stood only for ideas

61. According to the passage, Champollion's success depended partly on ----.

A) his work as a soldier in Egypt
B) the discovery of a second stone
C) his belief that hieroglyphs were purely symbolic
D) the help of the French army
E) his knowledge of a later stage of the Egyptian language

62. The passage is mainly about ----.

A) the military campaigns of the French army in Egypt
B) the differences between ancient Greek and Coptic
C) how a discovery made it possible to read an ancient writing system

DENEME 1 · ÇÖZÜMLER

1 E mitigate Erken uyarı sistemleri depremi önleyemez ama hasarı 'hafifletebilir' (mitigate). 'provoke' (kışkırtmak) ve 'accelerate' (hızlandırmak) anlamı tersine çevirir; 'disguise' (gizlemek) ve 'postpone' (ertelemek) hasarla mantıklı bir ilişki kurmaz.

2 D unknown 'Hiçbir klinik deneme tamamlanmadı' bilgisi etkilerin hâlâ 'bilinmediğini' (unknown) gösterir. 'obvious', 'reliable', 'permanent' ve 'harmless' denemelerin yokluğuyla çelişen kesin yargılardır.

3 C compatible 'Although … contradict' ile kurulan zıtlık, aslında 'bağdaşabilir' (compatible) oldukları sonucunu gerektirir. 'obsolete' (modası geçmiş), 'fragile' (kırılgan), 'redundant' (gereksiz) ve 'arbitrary' (keyfî) zıtlığı karşılamaz.

4 A concluded Bir araştırma bulgusunu bildiren 'that' yan cümlesini alabilen ve anlama uyan fiil 'concluded' (sonucuna vardılar) fiilidir. 'refused', 'neglected' ve 'hesitated' that-cümlesiyle bu anlamı kurmaz; 'pretended' (-mış gibi yaptı) bilimsel bağlama uymaz.

5 B come up with Kısa sürede yeni bir tedarik kaynağı 'bulmak, ortaya çıkarmak' anlamı 'come up with' ile verilir. 'look down on' (küçümsemek), 'put up with' (katlanmak), 'run out of' (tükenmek) ve 'take after' (birine çekmek) bağlama uymaz.

6 A torn down Binaların sonradan yeniden inşa edilmesi, önce 'yıkıldıklarını' (torn down) gösterir. 'set up' (kurmak), 'handed in' (teslim etmek), 'called off' (iptal etmek) ve 'brought about' (neden olmak) yapılarla bu anlamı kurmaz.

7 A had already moved 'By the time' + geçmiş zaman (reached), ondan önce tamamlanmış bir eylemi gerektirir: past perfect 'had already moved'. Diğer seçenekler zaman uyumunu bozar.

8 B had invested Geçmişteki gerçekleşmemiş koşul (two decades ago) ile bugünkü sonuç (today) birleşen karma koşul cümlesinde if-kısmı past perfect olur: 'had invested'.

9 C whose Boşluktan sonra gelen 'collection' ismi müzeye aittir; iyelik bildiren ilgi zamiri 'whose' gerekir. 'that' virgüllü ilgi cümlesinde kullanılmaz; 'which', 'where' ve 'whom' iyelik bildirmez.

10 C Despite Boşluktan sonra bir isim öbeği (the heavy rain) geldiği ve anlam zıtlık bildirdiği için edat 'Despite' gerekir. 'Although' ve 'Whereas' cümle alır; 'Because of' sebep bildirir; 'Unless' koşul bağlacıdır.

11 A be closed 'insist that' yapısı resmî İngilizcede yalın fiil (subjunctive) alır; köprü kapatılacağı için edilgen 'be closed' doğrudur.

12 D did the organisers raise Cümle başındaki 'Not only' devrik yapı gerektirir: yardımcı fiil + özne + fiil, yani 'did the organisers raise'. Diğerleri ya devrik değildir ya da devrik yapıyı yanlış kurar.

13 D making 'recommend' fiilinden sonra fiil gelecekse -ing biçimi kullanılır: 'recommends making'. 'recommend to make' yapısı standart değildir.

14 A whether '... or ...' ile iki olasılık sunan dolaylı soru 'whether ... or' kalıbıyla kurulur. 'unless', 'since', 'so that' ve 'even if' bu kalıbı oluşturmaz.

15 D the less likely 'The more ..., the ...' karşılaştırma kalıbının ikinci kısmı da 'the' + karşılaştırma sıfatıyla kurulur: 'the less likely'.

16 D for / by 'be praised for' (bir şey için övülmek) ve 'be impressed by' (bir şeyden etkilenmek) kalıpları doğrudur. Diğer edat çiftlerinden en az biri yanlış kalıp oluşturur.

17 A however Önceki cümledeki eski görüş (pasif durum) ile yeni bulgu (çok aktif) zıttır; zıtlık bağlacı 'however' gerekir. 'therefore' sonuç, 'similarly' benzerlik, 'for instance' örnek, 'in addition' ekleme bildirir.

18 A formed 'memories formed during the day' = 'gün içinde oluşan anılar'; anılar oluşturulduğu için edilgen anlamlı kısaltılmış ilgi cümlesi, yani V3 'formed' gerekir.

19 C that Boşluk 'waste products' ismini niteleyen ve özne görevi gören ilgi zamiridir; cansız isimler için 'that' kullanılır. 'what' öncül almaz; 'who' insanlar içindir; 'whose' ve 'where' yapıya uymaz.

20 C When Uykusuz kalındığında olumsuz sonuçların başladığı anlatılır; zaman/koşul bildiren 'When' doğrudur. 'Although' ve 'Whereas' zıtlık, 'Unless' olumsuz koşul bildirir; 'Until' anlamı bozar.

21 A as 'as seriously as' eşitlik kalıbıdır; ilk 'as' cümlede 'treated as seriously' biçiminde zaten verilmiştir, boşluğa ikinci 'as' gelir. 'than' üstünlük karşılaştırması içindir.

22 B accessible 'make + nesne + sıfat' yapısında nesneyi niteleyen sıfat gerekir: 'make knowledge accessible' (bilgiyi erişilebilir kılmak).

23 A although Eleştirmenlerin iddiası ile 'tam tersi doğru görünüyor' yargısı zıttır; zıtlık bağlacı 'although' gerekir.

24 C partly 'partly because' = 'kısmen ... olduğu için'; ziyaretçi artışının nedenlerinden birini verir. 'hardly', 'rarely', 'barely' ve 'seldom' olumsuz anlam katarak artış bilgisiyle çelişir.
